

Our Quest is On

Dear Friends,

Another month. Another issue. Another chance to communicate with you. As we put together an issue, we almost always get a tad nostalgic. Nostalgic, about the issues that have gone by. Learning, from the little mistakes that creep in, despite the best intentions. Trying to incorporate the suggestions that friends give. Seeking ways, to continue our quest for excellence.

It is also a matter of pride as we look back to the journey so far. Saying that the days were tough would be putting things mildly. With virtually no support and depleting resources we stuck on, in the midst of a recession that felled the big and the mighty. We persevered, bearing it all with a grin, for the dream had to be nurtured. The dream of a young and vivacious Core Sector Communiqué – the dream of being the one voice of sanity in the din that deafens.

As always, we have strung the current issue around Ferro Alloys – one of the critical components in the steel making process. All the other regular features too are in place. And to make things a little more exciting, we have introduced a quiz that is related to the lead story. The nation's top Quizadoo, Derek O'Brien has been kind enough to take on the task of creating this page and we sure hope that you will like it.

In our quest of incorporating various art forms in the creation process of the magazine, we have tried to play with water colours this time around. Do let us know whether you find the soothing lines of brush strokes as vivid as the conventional photograph so that we may continue experimenting.

A very dear friend, a gadget and gizmo freak, has taken over the core product segment and promises to unveil a plethora of goodies that will make us wired for more. Welcome aboard!

And please don't let the feedbacks dry out. Your suggestions, kind words, admonitions, praise – all are welcome, for they go a long, long way in helping us better ourselves. They are our commandments – dictates to be followed, routes to be adhered to, pitfalls that need to be avoided.

Happy reading

With Best Regards,
Suvabrata Ganguly
